Joseph Johnson, left, and Bob Eding, opposite page, created mosaics as public art pieces for downtown Grants Pass. People can craft their own steppable art at home.

Fragmented art

Start small to master mosaics

Words of advice from professional artists in the community are: If you want to attempt a mosaic, start small.

Bob Eding and Joseph Johnson each created a 3-foot-by-3-foot mosaic for the Grants Pass Ford Institute Leadership Class. The mosaics were permanently installed in downtown sidewalks in May.

Eding, who's known for his paintings and artwork at Evergreen Bank's Bear Hotel and Taprock Northwest Grill, took on the mosaic challenge, as he'd only completed one on a much smaller scale for his home.

"It was like making a puzzle," Eding said, only that it took much longer. About 100 hours were spent on the large piece of public art.

His mosaic "Lure of the Rogue" represents Glenn Wooldridge, who's known as one of the first to boat the Rogue River in the 1950s.

"He kind of opened it up so other boats could go down there," Eding said.

Johnson, who owns Natural Creations and does stone and rock work, created a mosaic that represents the region's rich logging history. The mosaic featured a solid piece of black slate carefully cut into a logger carrying an axe over his shoulder.

"One wrong move, and he could've ended up looking like Babe Ruth," Johnson said. He used a variety of grinders and dremels to shape the tile pieces.

Most of the tiles used in both mosaics were porcelain, as ceramic won't last in the outdoor elements. Eding used glass pieces for water in his mosaic to emulate the water effect.

"Any tile baked at a high heat will last out here," Eding said.

At one time, the pieces used in the mosaics were large tiles broken into small pieces.

In April, an event was held at the Bear Hotel where the public was able to help break the tiles that were used in the mosaics. Johnson said he had a group of children who helped, and in the end, they created an abstract mosaic from the shards.

"We mixed reds and blues," Johnson said. "It was exciting to see the kids so excited about building mosaics."

Johnson drew his picture on his cement slab and labeled it with the colors he wanted to use. It resembled a "paint-by-number" activity before he permanently
